ROLLS-ROYCE SPECTRE

If there's one brand that suits electrification, it's Rolls-Royce. Effortless power and near-silent progress? Sounds very on-brand for a bearer of the famous Spirit of Ecstasy. The Spectre uses the same aluminium spaceframe as the Phantom, Ghost and Cullinan, but instead of a creamy V12, the Spectre is powered by twin electric motors. It's not light either: courtesy in part of a 102kWh battery, it tips the scales at a hefty 2890kg.

FORD MUSTANG SM17

When a multiple Australian touring car champ and US IndyCar racing ace specifies a car to their own tastes, you just know it's going to be pretty quick. And so it proved when New Zealand racing driver Scott McLaughlin helped create the 'Scott McLaughlin Limited Edition SM17 by Herrod Performance' Ford Mustang. The first car in the world to use a newly developed 3.0-litre supercharger made by Whipple, it puts out a hilarious 775bhp.

BMW M3 CS

Considering its pretty punchy price tag (in excess of £30,000 more than a 'regular' M3), the M3 CS doesn't exactly deliver on the 'bang per buck' scale. However, you do get a revised anti-roll bar, stiffer suspension and a gearbox and engine that's been mounted more stiffly in the chassis. There's also a pair of racing stripes daubed prominently on the bodywork, just to remind you that this is one seriously special car.

RIMAC NEVERA

The word 'Nevera' means a powerful electrical storm. And it's pretty apt for this hypercar, because Slovenian EV innovator Rimac packs some lightning punch into this svelte supercar. The company makes electric components and powertrains for some of the most exotic names in sports cars and, with a calling card like the Nevera, you can see why the likes of Aston Martin, Ferrari and Porsche have come knocking on Rimac's door.

BENTLEY CONTINENTAL MULLINER

Distinctive 22-inch alloy wheels and a magnificently opulent 'Double Diamond' grille mark the Continental Mulliner out from its already imposing stablemates. There are V8-flavoured versions but if it's top-of-the-line lavishness you want (and you probably do), then the twin-turbo W12 will be the one for you – and that's distinguished by thumping twin exhaust pipes rather than the quad tailpipes of 'lesser' V8 Mulliners.

MERCEDES AMG SL55

The Mercedes SL used to be more boulevardier than sports car, but the latest model aims to change that: for the first time, this generation of SL has been developed by the out-and-out petrolheads of Mercedes' AMG division and has the Porsche 911 firmly in its sights. That being said, it'll still cruise the coast roads of Malibu or the Cote D'Azur with supreme insouciance. Only this time it's a joy on mountain switchbacks, too.
